Speaker talked about the longevity of organisms based on his work on microscopic nematode C. elegans and its mutants. He discussed about aging, why its study is important, model systems, various aging parameters and elaborated the one associated with his findings: Nutrition. In C. elegans the rate of ageing is regulated by food (nutrition), although over nutrition, accelerates aging which leads to their death. He also talked about microbiome how the changes in microbiota cause diseases. The concluding question of the talk was, with such diverse nutritional choices, how does an organism maintain physiological sanity? The answer to which was “adaptive capacity to varying diet modulated by gene-diet interactions”. This was discussed at length by speaker demonstrating involvement of FLR-R gene.

At the end many students and teachers' queries were taken by speaker. All together it was a very informative session.

Session ended with vote of thanks by Society president, Ifrah Sadaf.
