The session on ' Financial Modelling and Valuations, ' hosted by the International Finance Student Association (IFSA-Hansraj), was a specialized skill-building workshop aimed at helping the newly inducted Junior Analysts for the term 2023-24 excel in case competitions. A session on the Discounted Cash Flow (DCF) model was conducted to give a solid understanding of this key valuation method. The session introduced them to the fundamentals of projecting future cash flows, determining discount rates, and calculating the present value of those cash flows. Analysts were shown how to estimate cash flows based on company performance and how to calculate discount rates, focusing on concepts like the Weighted Average Cost of Capital (WACC).

The session also provided hands-on experience in building a DCF model using Excel, applying the financial concepts discussed. This practical approach enabled participants to construct a DCF model and understand its application in evaluating investment opportunities and company valuations. By the end of the session, they had a clear grasp of using the DCF model for real-world financial analysis and decision-making.

In addition to the technical aspects, the session emphasized the importance of accuracy and attention to detail when projecting future financials and discount rates, as small changes can significantly impact valuation outcomes. The interactive approach ensured that analysts not only understood the theory but also gained practical knowledge.
