The Economics Society of Hansraj College organized an informative session on November 21, 2024, featuring Dr. Anirban Mitra from the University of Kent. The event drew significant interest, with 100 students attending to learn about postgraduate opportunities in economics.

Dr. Mitra presented details about two distinct master's programs that offer different pathways for economics students. The first was the established MSc Economics program at the University of Kent, which provides comprehensive training in economic theory and applied research methods. comparable courses at many other UK universities, where fees can easily exceed £25,000 to £30,000. This pricing makes quality international education more accessible to Indian students who might otherwise find UK programs financially out of reach.

Dr. Mitra also addressed funding opportunities, discussing various scholarships available to help students manage costs. These financial aid options can significantly reduce the burden, making these programs viable for talented students regardless of their economic background.

He encouraged attendees to explore the University of Kent's official website for comprehensive information about application procedures, specific scholarship criteria, course structures, and campus life. The session successfully provided students with concrete options for advancing their economics education while addressing practical concerns about affordability and financial support, helping them make informed decisions about their academic futures.
