The History Society of Hansraj College recently held a workshop on "Gender and Historical Thinking," with guest speakers Dr. Rachana Choudhury from Dr. B. R. Ambedkar University, Prof. Shalini Shah from the University of Delhi, and Dr. Aparna Balachandran from the University of Delhi. The workshop focused on how studying gender in history is not just about adding women to historical stories but about understanding history from a gender perspective. The speakers explained that to write this kind of history, historians need to carefully examine the same sources that have often ignored or hidden women's voices. They suggested that we need to "read against the grain," which means rethinking and questioning traditional sources to uncover the role of women in history. The discussion also revealed how these sources and archives are shaped by politics, showing how the creation of knowledge is linked to power. Students actively participated in the discussion, raising questions and sharing their thoughts on the topic. The workshop highlighted how looking at history through the lens of gender can change the way we understand the past, making it a valuable learning experience for all who attended.
